The Hidden Cost of Fast Fashion

Fast fashion, meaning cheap clothes that follow the latest trends and are quickly replaced, has changed the way we shop. A T-shirt that costs less than a cup of coffee seems like a bargain, but its real price is paid by the environment. Yet fashion companies keep launching new collections every few weeks, and shoppers are encouraged to buy more and more.

Producing clothes requires enormous amounts of water and energy. Cotton, for instance, needs a great deal of water to grow, while the dyes used in factories often end up in rivers, damaging ecosystems and the health of nearby communities. In addition, many modern fabrics, such as polyester, are made from plastic. Each time they are washed, they release tiny fibres that travel through drains into the sea, where fish and other animals swallow them.

Shoppers also play a part in the problem. Studies suggest that many garments are worn only a few times before being thrown away, and most of them end up in landfill, where they can take years to break down. Fortunately, more consumers are now changing their habits. Some buy second-hand clothes, swap outfits with friends or repair items instead of replacing them. Others choose well-made pieces from brands that use recycled materials. Experts say that the most sustainable garment is the one already in your wardrobe, so wearing clothes for longer is a simple way to reduce waste.

Question 25. What is the passage mainly about?

A. The environmental cost of cheap clothing and ways to reduce it

B. The history of the textile industry and how it has developed

C. How shoppers can choose the latest fashion trends each season

D. The advantages of buying cotton products from local farmers

Question 26. The word "them" in paragraph 3 refers to _____.

A. shoppers B. studies C. garments D. brands

Question 27. According to paragraph 2, what happens to the tiny fibres released when polyester clothes are washed?

A. They are turned into new fabric by recycling plants.
B. They are collected by factories and used again.
C. They disappear completely once they reach the water.
D. They flow into the sea and are eaten by animals.

Question 28. According to the passage, what is the most sustainable thing to do with clothes?

A. Replace them with cheaper ones every few weeks
B. Wear the clothes you already have for much longer
C. Throw them away when they go out of fashion
D. Wash them as often as possible to keep them fresh
